Chapter 12

Zarkon asks Haggar of the status of her plan. She tells him that the first wave will occupy the Lion ships while a reconnaissance team searches for the missing component to secure it on the ground. A second wave will come up after the first to further distress the Lion ships with additional weaponry. A third wave will terrorize the citizenry to prevent them from supporting the Lion ships or allowing a revolt on the ground.

A fourth wave will be reserved for the beginnings of a super weapon against Arus. She suggests this fourth wave will form a RoBeast that will match Voltron in size, strength, range, and capability. The other elements that will be already deployed will be a part of this RoBeast, serving as its mechanical skeleton and weaponry. The RoBeast is based upon a creature from the Drune's home planet, made into a cyborg by Haggar. The cyborg lies at the core of the RoBeast, and if killed, will disable the operation of the RoBeast, "killing" it. The RoBeast will be able to reassemble, regenerate, and add new limbs, including its head, as long as its communications remains intact. The RoBeast also "knows" of its weapons and capabilities from the Drune that are connected to it.
